Course Description
This course is a study of Islam’s interaction with major world religions such as Christianity, Judaism, Hinduism and Buddhism. We examine how Islam theological contrasts with other religions and how Muslim communities have lived among other religious communities for centuries. Special attention is given to how politics and the rise of the modern nation-state affect the relationship between various communities and to new interfaith initiatives that aim to bring peace between the world’s religions. A key question is how the different religions can be true to their own faiths while living in a peaceful pluralistic world.

Learning Objectives
- To think critically about what you hear and read regarding the course topic,
- To identify questions and to have the necessary research skills to answer those questions,
- To compare and contrast different points of views in the process developing your own,
- To present your ideas in an appealing and coherent fashion, and
- To write a well-organized, concise, and convincing research paper.

1 In consultation with the author, this syllabus has been edited for length, removing details particular to the author’s context such as office hours and location, absence policies, honor codes, and other instructor-specific (or institution-specific) details.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS AND ASSIGNMENTS

Field Trips to Refugee Centers

We will be visiting a mosque in Erie which has a sizable refugee population. Erie is one of the few centers for the US Committee for Refugees and Immigrants and is thus expected to host a good number of the 10,000 Syrian refugees that will be accepted to the United States this upcoming year. I would like you to contemplate how you can help the refugees, who come from both Muslim and Christian backgrounds, adjust to American society. The challenge of refugee resettlement is a living case study where we can move from religious literacy to that of civic engagement and transformation. I do not want you to simply learn about religious difference, but rather be able to interact with people of different faiths and contribute to the larger social good.
Midterm Exam
The midterm will reinforce the material that has accumulated through the first half of the semester. The exam will be in the form of short essays and the questions will be based on material presented in lectures, class discussions and the assigned readings.

Group Project
Students will present on a topic related to the course material at the end of the semester. The projects will allow students to explore topics of their interests and help develop team-building skills.

Response Papers
You will write two 500-750 word responses to the readings that will help you synthesize the readings and demonstrate how they are relevant to your fellow students. You should provide your insights into the readings and demonstrate that you have critically engaged the materials. In the response, you should not summarize the readings but rather critically present an argument that you found interesting, useful, problematic, or confusing. You should relate the new material to previous readings and class sessions.

Quizzes
There will be six quizzes on our course website that will help you review your knowledge of the readings and lectures. Each quiz will be brief with only five multiple choice questions and be assigned approximately every two weeks. Your lowest quiz grade will be dropped. Studies show that frequent and shorter quizzes are better for learning and retention than infrequent, longer tests.

Final Papers
A 10-12 page double-spaced paper is due at the end of the course that will be based on each student's specific interests. Please discuss the topic of the final paper with me beforehand, preferably after week 7. Please take advantage of the writing center. Optional drafts are due the last week of class. Final papers are due during the final exam period. Half a letter grade will be subtracted from late papers (A to B+...etc.).
